Loss of heterozygosity in the retinoblastoma gene on chromosome 13 in adenocarcinomas of different histologic types. Loss of heterozygosity in the retinoblastoma (RB) gene at 13q14 was studied in 7 adenocarcinomas and 11 gastric carcinomas, 5 liver carcinomas, 2 colon cancers, 5 leiomyomas, and 7 leiomyosarcomas. Loss of heterozygosity was observed in all cases of adenocarcinomas and in more than 50% of gastric carcinomas. It was detected only in one case of liver carcinoma, one of colon cancer, and one leiomyoma. These results support the previous hypothesis that loss of heterozygosity in the RB gene plays an important role in the development of a variety of adenocarcinomas, including gastric carcinoma, liver carcinoma, and leiomyosarcoma. Inactivation of the remaining allele of the RB gene in adenocarcinomas may have led to the development of gastric carcinoma, liver carcinoma, and leiomyosarcoma.
